

Solar panels are out of stock in the US

Overview

Over the past five months around a gigawatt worth of panels—potentially around 4,000 containers—has likely become stuck in warehouses at U. ports, while the supplier's foot the bill for storage costs, says the Solar Energy Industries Association. solar energy companies plunged in after-hours trading on Monday after Senate Republicans proposed changes to President Donald Trump's tax and spending bill that would eliminate key clean energy incentives. According to estimates, even more containers have been held up in factories and ports from a few countries including Vietnam and Malaysia or have been diverted to places such as Europe.
